Harmit got a bad start, they say he did, but it matters little now; he might as well have had A Brake Story.

Professor J. Mitchell, the celebrated "South Mountain Wizard," while out gunning had a most thrilling adventure with a den of black snakes, known as "rusers," from which he narrowly escaped with his life. As is his habit, the professor had taken his favourite earbine and gone into the mountain after squirrels. Best part of the forenoon had been spent in beating through the bushes and over the moke without.

meeting with any adventure, and but ordinary Stopping a moment to take a survey of the surroundings, he saw a large blake snake stretched out on a rook sunning himself. He at bace took up a couple of stones and threw one at his snake ship, but unfortunately missed him.

This proceed the snake, and in an instant he ancoiled himself, and stood with his head creet, as if indiguant at this intrusion, and at the same time gave a loud, shrill hiss, or rather a whistle. The professor delivered his second stone with such precision as to mortally wound his enemy. No sooner, however, had he thrown the stone than be heard a method among the brush strous black snake (a recer) coming directly towards him, with head erected about five fact from the ground, and his forked tongue darting from his distended jaws, as if bent on light.

The professor (who is an acknowledged erack shot) immediately raised his carbine, fired, and had the proud satisfaction of seeing the mou-ster anake roll over in the agonies of death-having split his head open with a ball. This proved but the commensument of the buttle; for before the professor had time to congratulate himself upon his success in vanquishing two of proached to within a few feet of him, his head erect, bissing and dating his tongue out in a manner to appeal the atoutest heart. To retreat was out of the question; a fight was the only alternative, and quick as thought he levelled his carbine at the snake's head, but, unfortunately, feasor, and commenced winding his slimy coils around his legs and body tighter at very coil of his lonthsome form, until the professor was His efforts to extricate himself from the "coils of death" as they seemed to be -were unavailing, for with every effort the folds tightened, and the work of respiration became diffi oult. Death and the snake stared him in the face, and made the cold chills of horror and agony ercep over his body. It was a fearful moment, a moment of the most intense horror and agony, that made the flesh creep, the blood chill, and the hair literally " stood on end, like quille upon a fretful porcupine.". Nothing but his great presence of mind saved him from strangulation and a losthsome death. Recol-severing it at a stroke. The goils relaxed, the snake dropped at his feet, and the professor

By this time he heard a great rustling in the bushes, and the dry bark crackling in every direction, accompanied by loud, shrill, angry woods were filled with snakes. Deeming discre-had up his carbine, girthed his hunting kuife, and beat a precipitate retreat. The professor was
